The Shaker Glen House

This old farmhouse was built and originally occupied by Captain Joseph Gardner in the early part of the 19th century. After four years of labor — one year on the foundation alone, the house was completed (1804) built entirely from timber grown on the property. The old shed, now the dining room, is part of the original structure, the fireplace marking what was the end of the old summer kitchen.

The murals in the hall and reception room, found under layers of wall-paper, are the well preserved paintings of Rufus Porter made before he became famous as an inventor and publicist. These are some of the most complete and important so far discovered. It is said he earned his board and room while attending college by painting murals on the walls of early American homes.

Rufus Porter later became famous as an inventor. He was the founder of the Scientific American; the inventor of a repeating gun, a stern paddle wheel river steam boat and a power driven dirigible balloon.

The house is structurally the same as it was originally except for the recent addition to the shed made necessary by increasing patronage.

Our Special Party Service

We take all the cares of entertainment from your shoulders, supervision of all details such as flowers, favors and all table arrangements. This allows you to be a guest at your own party. We make no charge for the use of our bridge rooms or room for large parties, but we do require a minimum charge of $1.00 per person for meals.

SHAKER GLEN HOUSE was opened November 1st, 1937 and has always been managed by Harriet A. Buckmaster.
